

Ballif returns to Physics Department Hafen appointed university provost

LEEANN LAMBERT

BYU's new president, Rex E. Lee, announced Tuesday the appointment of Bruce C. Hafen to the position of university provost. Hafen is the dean of the J. Reuben Clark Law School and will become the first full-time appointee to the position of provost, replacing Jae R. Ballif who has been serving as both provost and academic vice president, said a BYU press release. In the newly appointed position as provost, Hafen "will coordinate the work of all BYU vice presidents and share with the president, under his direction, overall responsibility for the university," said the release. It will be a privilege to work with President Lee. He and I both know each other in past experience that we worked together," said Hafen. Hafen will officially become the university BYU provost on July 1, the day Lee officially takes over as president. An acting dean will be appointed while a search for a new dean of the law school is completed, said Hafen.

On May 12 President Gordon B. Hinckley, a counselor in the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, announced that Lee would replace President Jeffrey R. Holland as president of BYU.

President Holland was called to serve as a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy during the LDS Church's last general conference in April.

In the news release, Lee expressed his appreciation for the contributions Ballif has made to BYU over the past several years.

"No one has had greater influence in shaping the present academic climate at BYU than has Jae Ballif," Lee said.

"We know that in returning to his faculty position, Dr. Ballif continues what to him is the most important function of the university—teaching and research," said Lee.

"I admire what he (Ballif) and President Holland did together, and I hope President Lee and I can build on what they have done," said Hafen.

Ballif will return to BYU's Physics Department to serve on the faculty.

"Hafen became dean of the BYU law school in 1985 after serving as president of Ricks College for seven years," said the press release.

He was an assistant to a past president of BYU, Elder Dallin H. Oaks, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, from 1971 to 1973 and assisted in the establishment of the law school. Hafen maintained his law faculty status at BYU's law school while serving as Ricks College president, said the press release.

The newly appointed provost graduated from Dixie College, BYU and obtained his juris doctorate at the University of Utah, said the release.

"Hafen has been president of the American Association of Presidents of Independent Colleges and Universities and has published widely on legal issues pertaining to the family and the Constitution," said the press release.

Oil response teams proposed Sentencing postponed for North

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The major oil companies announced plans on Tuesday to create a nationwide network of spill response teams capable of handling an accident anywhere as the Exxon Valdez disaster anywhere on U.S. coastal waters.

The companies, including Exxon and virtually all the big oil shippers, also proposed measures designed to prevent future spills and to establish clearer lines of government authority for reacting to tanker accidents.

The three-part program will provide improved environmental protection wherever tankers operate in U.S. waters," said Allen E. Murray, chairman of Mobil Corp. head of an industry task force that produced the plans. Environmental groups called the program a step in the right direction but said they wanted to see it implemented before assessing its importance. Murray said the industry plan to have the new system in full operation within one lot of good thought has gone into this report," said Epstein of the Environmental Defense Fund, "but we're still skeptical of whether all the nice work that's on paper comes to fruition."

A key to success of the new system, Murray said, is giving the Coast Guard full responsibility for deciding when industry cleanup crews would be called into action. Current lines of authority between state and federal agencies are unclear, he said.

"Somebody has to be able to be in charge and not have to make a conference call, and we think that should be the Coast Guard," Murray told a news conference.

The Coast Guard got its first copy of the plan Tuesday, spokesman Jack O'Dell said, and would need more time to study it before commenting on details.

The plan will cost more than $250 million over the first five years, adding one-twentieth of one cent a year to the oil companies' cost of making a gallon of gasoline, said Richard M. Morrow, a member of the task force.

Murray said the added expense would not be tacked onto gas prices at the pump.

"It's a cost of doing business for the industry — we'll absorb it," he said.

Soviet cruise liner hits iceberg

Associated Press

LO, Norway — A Norwegian guard ship cut through thick ice Tuesday to rescue hundreds of people who had taken refuge on ice and in lifeboats after their Soviet liner hit an iceberg and took on water. The Soviet crew members stayed on the listing 630-foot ocean liner Maxim Gorky to keep it afloat in the region Sea while the rescue ship helicopters saved passengers lying in blankets in the 37-degree temperatures. No one was seriously injured.

The Maxim Gorky was carrying 950 people when it rammed the iceberg in foggy arctic twilight shortly after midnight, while most of the passengers were partying in a shipboard club.

Suddenly there was a terrible crash that almost shook me from my seat, said Rudolf Ludwig, 67, of Baden, West Germany, one of the passengers on the midnight sun cruise who was evacuated by helicopter to Norway's Svalbard island.

"We were told to get into the lifeboats," Ludwig said. "We sat for five hours among the icebergs. The atmosphere was calm, and the Russian sailors did everything they could. They gave us vodka and whiskey in the boats, since it was cold. And blankets, too."

The iceberg ripped two holes in the ship, which quickly took on water. Passengers said three decks became submerged.

The coast guard vessel Senja, its bow reinforced for icebreaking, rushed to the area, about 300 miles east of northern Greenland and 180 miles west of Svalbard island.

It reached the area about four hours later, and Norwegian officials said all passengers had been picked up about three hours later.

Soviet ships steamed to the area and took over rescue operations.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the ship carried 575 passengers, all but about a dozen from West Germany, and 377 crew members.

The ship set out on June 11 from Bremerhaven, West Germany, sailed to Iceland and struck the iceberg while sailing around the Spitsbergen island chain on its way to Norway.

The Norwegian Meteorological Institute sends out weekly ice charts of the area, but the situation changes too quickly to be dependable for navigation, the Norwegian news agency reported.

West German passenger Winfried Prince said there was no panic, and "the Russian crew has worked perfectly in disembarking passengers into lifeboats, and also the Norwegians who picked us up ... have done a wonderful job."

About 120 Soviet crewmen stayed aboard the Maxim Gorky to keep it from sinking.

Finn B. Hansen of the North Norway Rescue Coordination Center said the Soviet tugboat Sarja arrived with pumps and two more Russian vessels steamed toward the ship.

"It looks like there is enough new pumping equipment aboard to keep it afloat," Hansen said.

Pump kills fish at Utah Lake

PAT BIRKEDAH
Senior Reporter

A large number of fish are killed at pumping station that pumps water from Utah Lake to the Jordan River. Charlie Thompson, regional fisheries manager with the Division of Wildlife Resources, said his office has been getting reports about the dead fish in the Jordan River a few weeks ago but whenever they went to investigate they found very little evidence of a problem. News media reported early in the month that the fish were dying a mysterious death.

The Division of Wildlife investigated the area again on Monday and there were large numbers of dead fish in the Jordan River. Thompson said 99 percent of the fish he saw at the pumping station were carp that were killed going through the pump.

Thompson said carp congregate there in large numbers at spawning time. The problem in this situation is that there is a mechanical issue (the pump) which threatens the carp.

Thompson said, "Every fish I saw was mutilated. The carp are just the size to be damaged by the pumps. Smaller fish can go right through without injury."

The carp killed by the pump are about 24 inches long and weigh two to three pounds. The mesh that covers the pump holes 4-by-4 inches that allows carp to go through. A mesh small enough to keep the carp out would catch more debris, increasing maintenance cost.

At the pumping station at Utah Lake and the Jordan River carp are swimming into the pump and dying.

Thompson said carp are generally not considered a valuable resource.

Delbert Atkinson, regional enforcement officer with the Division of Wildlife Resources, said fish congregate in the deeper waters by the pump when a north wind blows.

The north end of the lake drops as much as three feet when the wind blows. Atkinson said the water is shallow so when the wind blows from the north the water is sometimes only six inches deep. The area by the pumps has been dredged so the water is deeper.

Atkinson said fish get pulled through the pump whenever there is a north wind. He said it is more noticeable now because the numbers are greater. The carp population in the lake has increased in recent years.

Apostle in Bolivia Elder Ballard says efforts to continue

Universe Services

Refuting earlier reports, Tuesday an apostle of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints said missionary work in Bolivia is proceeding "wisely, prudently and cautiously" in the wake of the shooting deaths of two missionaries last month in Bolivia.

Elder M. Russell Ballard, a member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, has just returned from a tour of Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador, where he and Elder Charles Didier, president of the South America North Area of the Church, met with missionaries and the general membership.

"We toured nine missions and gave instructions to the missionaries concerning safety precautions they need to observe, including returning to their apartments by 9:30 p.m. and how to travel and conduct themselves in the present climate," he said.

"Contrary to rumors I've heard since I returned, the missionary elders are still wearing white shirts and ties, the sister missionaries are dressing as they always have, and the missionaries are wearing their name tags."

"We're just being more attentive to caution," Elder Ballard said, adding that "we will continue with our efforts in those countries and we'll do it wisely, prudently and cautiously."

Richard T. Bretzing, managing director of Church security and a retired FBI agent, also met with the missionaries in La Paz and gave them guidelines for taking precautionary measures.

Elder Ballard said a news conference was held in La Paz "to dispel the myth that the missionaries have something to do with government agencies."

"In South America the missionaries have been perceived as being connected with U.S. government agencies. This is, of course, absolutely untrue."

"Our missionary guidelines have always been that the missionaries are not to engage in political discussions of any kind."

"This is the case regardless of where they serve in the world. Ours is a simple responsibility of proclaiming the message of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the world, and nothing more," he said.

In Bolivia, Elder Ballard met with the federal minister of religions and the Catholic archbishop who expressed their concern and support.

Oliver North's sentencing has been postponed while a federal judge considers allegations that one of the jurors lied.

Gesell, North's lawyers said "the possibility that a juror might have been under the influence of narcotics during trial calls into question the fairness of the proceeding and warrants further inquiry."

Ms. King told reporters after the verdict that she had used marijuana and cocaine before the trial but not while she sat on the jury that convicted North of three felony counts.

The former White House aide had been scheduled to be sentenced Friday. He faces a possible 10-year sentence for aiding and abetting in obstruction of Congress, destroying or mutilating official documents and accepting an illegal gratuity — a security system outside his house — from arms dealer Richard V. Secord.

Gesell postponed sentencing until July 5.

China arrests more students United States appeals for clemency for those condemned

Associated Press

BEIJING — The Chinese government Tuesday announced the arrests of more students involved in the pro-democracy movement and revised visa requirements in an apparent move to prevent others from fleeing.

The United States urged China to spare the lives of the 11 demonstrators sentenced to death for participating in protests, and to pardon all arrested.

China kept up its surveillance of foreign journalists, and the Canadian government said it would lodge a formal protest after a Canadian reporter said authorities tried to abduct her.

A Beijing University student, who was one of the leaders of the democracy movement, was caught and returned to the capital, the official media reported.

Liu Gang, 28, was apprehended Monday in Hebei province just south of Beijing, radio and television news reports said.

Liu is one of 21 students on a wanted list the government issued last week. The students are accused of masterminding the seven weeks of demonstrations for greater freedom and an end to official corruption. The Chinese military crushed the movement earlier this month.

So far, six of those students have been arrested or have turned themselves in. Authorities say they have arrested more than 1,360 people for participating in the democracy movement.

A student who was not on the wanted list was arrested for "spreading rumors" to the U.S. government-funded Voice of America, the People's Daily said Tuesday.

Tens of millions of Chinese listen to the VOA, which has been a main target of criticism by the Chinese government.

The government accuses VOA of spreading lies about the military crackdown.

The VOA's bureau chief was expelled last week along with a reporter for The Associated Press.

The crackdown began the night of June 3-4 when troops backed by tanks fired on civilians and drove thousands of protesters from Tiananmen Square in Beijing.

The government says about 300 people were killed; Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence reports say as many as 3,000 people died.

Last week, a Beijing court sentenced eight protesters to death and a court in Shanghai condemned three people for participating in demonstrations in the cities.

The Supreme Court Tuesday ordered lower courts to "severely punish counterrevolutionary elements who have been charged."

In Washington, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the United States appealed for clemency for the condemned, and pardons for those arrested.

"Sentences of death in Shanghai and Beijing could only deepen the wounds of the past few weeks," he said.

Fitzwater declined to say how the United States would act if China carried out the executions.

In a move apparently designed to tighten the dragnet around pro-democracy activists, the Chinese government invalidated all exit permits issued before Tuesday.

Chinese must obtain the permits when seeking visas to travel abroad.

Chinese police guarding foreign consular offices turned away visa applicants who did not have the permits.

Company wants to recycle baby diapers

WASHINGTON — Procter & Gamble Co. said Tuesday that it will fund several projects to recycle some of the 16 billion disposable diapers used and discarded in the United States each year.

Plans call for the plastic in the diapers to be recycled into such things as flower pots, garbage bags and park benches, while the pulp will be used in cardboard boxes, building insulation and wallboard liner.

Environmentalists warn that the plastic-coated disposable diapers, used by 85 percent of babies in the United States, don't decompose. That, they say, could provide potential breeding grounds for dangerous viruses and bacteria that cause polio, hepatitis, meningitis and other diseases.

"We believe as a company it is our responsibility to ensure that our products are good not only for the baby but that they are good for the environment and can be easily recycled, composed and incinerated," said Nancy Eddy, P&G's project coordinator.

P&G, the largest disposable diaper maker, sells $1.65 billion worth of Pampers and Luvs annually.

Company officials, speaking at a news conference at the National Press Club, said P&G would spend an undetermined amount of money over the next five years on recycling projects in the states of Washington, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Florida.

Man's body found after 5 day search

MOAB, — Grand County authorities have found the body of a Salt Lake City man five days after he disappeared while swimming in the Colorado River with members of a church group.

A search and rescue team from the Grand County area found the body of Dennis Astle, 41, at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday about one mile from the place he last was seen.

Astle was floating near rapids in the river at the Big Bend Picnic Area about 10 miles east of Moab with a group of youngsters Thursday when he vanished after helping several children to the shore. Witnesses said he was wearing a life jacket.

The Salt Lake County firefighter had accompanied a Latter-day Saint group of about 40 people, including two of his children, on the camping trip that coincided with a state fireman's convention in Moab.

Among the searchers were five off-duty firefighters who arrived in Moab on Monday.

AIDS becomes more of a social issue

SALT LAKE CITY — Although there is not yet a cure for AIDS, researchers have made enough advances in treatment that Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is being transformed from a health issue to a social issue, a state health official said.

"We still do not have a cure for AIDS, and most people are still pessimistic about having a vaccine available anytime in the near future," said state epidemiologist Craig Nichols, who recently attended the Fifth International Conference on AIDS held in Montreal.

The conference drew more than 12,000 participants, including scientists, journalists and activists who gathered to discuss the scientific, social and human sides of the killer disease.

Nichols said participants received encouraging news about therapies — new treatments that may help infected individuals live longer and have a better quality of life.

"It's (therefore) very clear that AIDS is becoming a major social issue now," he said. "We will be deciding how ... to treat people who are HIV-infected."

Political problems stir unrest in Greece

ATHENS, Greece — A political crisis and new elections loomed Tuesday as conservative leader Constantine Mitsotakis was given three days to form a government but was rejected by a possible left-wing coalition partner.

Both Mitsotakis' New Democracy Party and the communist-dominated leftist alliance, who together won nearly 60 percent of Sunday's vote, say a new government first must punish those responsible for the scandals of the defeated socialist administration of Premier Andreas Papandreou.

But the alliance of the pro-Soviet Greek Communist Party and the Greek Left Party, which finished third, turned down Mitsotakis' offer to join in an interim government that would investigate the corruption.

The alliance also refuses to cooperate with Papandreou, making the possibility of new elections likely and paralyzing Parliament, which cannot order an inquiry if the political parties cannot form a government.

Mitsotakis said Papandreou cannot keep making decisions and demanded the replacement within 24 hours of officials appointed by Papandreou.

Nation's largest polluter near Salt Lake

TOOELE, — Western Utah's Tooele County may be home to military installations, hazardous-waste facilities and a plant labeled as the nation's single greatest polluter, but officials say the clouds aren't all black.

AMAX Magnesium Corp., which extracts metal from evaporation ponds on the western shore of the Great Salt Lake, is the nation's single greatest source of toxic air pollutants, specifically chlorine, according to the Natural Resources Defense Council.

"Certainly we're not proud of the designation," AMAX spokesman Lee Brown said Tuesday. "But the fact is, we've been cognizant of the emissions and have done environmental studies that show absolutely no discernible effects."

Brown said the plant employs about 600 workers who extract magnesium chloride salt from the briny water and process magnesium and liquid chloride for a variety of industrial uses.

OIL

The oil company responsible for a spill would pay the actual cleanup costs, with the industry response crews working for the company as contractors, Murray said.

The program was crafted under strict secrecy and is the industry's most comprehensive response to shortcomings exposed by the Exxon spill in Prince William Sound.

The industry has come under strong attack from environmental groups and Capitol Hill for not having contingency plans for responding to a spill the size of the Exxon accident.

Murray said the industry has "a great record" in responding to smaller-scale spills, but he acknowledged weaknesses in preparing for big spills.

The new industry plan would:

- Establish a Petroleum Industry Response Organization, with headquarters in Washington, D.C., and regional "response centers" in New York, Norfolk, Va., New Orleans, Long Beach, Calif., and Seattle.
- Set up "staging areas" at 19 sites nationwide where response equipment would be stored.
- Spend $30 million to $35 million over five years on industry research programs.

House ordered demolished

CAREY M. JARVIS
 Verse Staff Writer

There might be reasons but none justify voting for the destruction of the only pioneer homes in town, said Lucile Steele, Orem City council member.

The abatement of the house owned by Anna Millet at 130 South Main Blvd. was one of the resolutions reached by the Orem City Council at their Tuesday night meeting.

This is one of the oldest houses in town. It was built by James Stratton approximately 100 years ago," said Millet.

Partridge, chief building inspector for the City of Orem, said the house receives abatement action because it is so dilapidated the city has to determine whether it should be repaired or abolished.

"The house (Millet's) has been empty for about nine years now. It will take a lot of money to bring it up to code," said Partridge.

Millet said "I would like to see it have a buyer, but because it is in a business zone that makes it difficult."

Mayor S. Blaine Willes suggested using the house as a live-in museum, charging admission and selling handicrafts.

Steele opposed the house's abatement plan alternative in which Orem City would tear down Millet's home.

Council member Kelvin C. Clayton recommended September 1 for the demolition of the house, with the cost to be recovered at the time the property is sold.

Provo council approves city's new fiscal budget

By REBECCA HERRON
 Universe Staff Writer

The Provo City Council unanimously passed Tuesday the city's budget of approximately $66 million for the 1989-90 fiscal year.

"This budget is one of the most insensitive budgets ever proposed," said Howard Stephenson, a Utah Taxpayers Association spokesman.

Stephenson said that the highway bonds (bonds issued for the improvement of city roads) were responsible for "such a high budget."

He said Provo voters would not have approved the bonds if they had understood the bonds would mean an increase in taxes. Anagene Cotrell, a councilwoman, said "Taxpayers understood what that bonding meant and that the road improvements were necessary for the city."

Cotrell said that the budget also provides pay raises to the city employees in order to "reward and keep the good people working for the city."

Mayor Joseph Jenkins's budget proposal presented to the city council May 2, received adjustments such as the increase on the amount allotted to the parks department and to the public library fund.

The budget approved at the city council meeting is $60,000 less than the budget proposed on May 2.

of U lowers requirements for early admission students

High school juniors must have B+ average, score 25 on ACT

Associated Press

SLAKE CITY — University of Utah officials lowered the grade-point average and test-score requirements that exceptional students must meet to enroll at the university without graduating from high school.

The Institutional Council approved Monday reducing the required high school grade-point average from 3.7, to 3.5, a B+.

The changes also allow for lower scores on the American College Test needed for early admission.

Previously students had to score at least 27 points on the ACT, which is in the 85th percentile nationally. The new standards call for students to score 25 points on the ACT, or in the 75th percentile.

The new standards for early admission are effective immediately, said J. Stayner Landward, Director of Admissions. Qualifying students must complete their junior year of high school.

In addition to grades and test scores, students must have a letter of recommendation from a counselor stating that the students are mature enough to handle a university environment.

Students also must write a letter themselves giving reasons for wanting to enter the university early.

The early admissions students forgo a high school diploma, while others use college credits to satisfy remaining high school requirements, and thus receive a high school diploma after a year or two of college, said Landward.

Early admission has always been a small program, Landward said. Only 11 students were admitted under the program last year. Officials, however, are hoping that more high school students will take advantage of the program now that standards have been reduced.

Landward said that an increasing number of students want to press ahead with their education as rapidly as possible. The university policy changes should help keep these students in Utah and raise the quality of the student body. The change comes on the heels of legislation passed last January to encourage students to graduate from high school early.

As with university officials, lawmakers took the action with the hope of accelerating students' graduation from high school. At the time, school officials said the legislation would make little difference to local districts because few students are graduating early.

The legislation gives a state subsidy of $300 to each student who graduates from high school at the end of his or her junior year. A similar amount goes to local school districts for each graduating junior.

Since such students are high school graduates, they will be admitted to the university under regular admission standards rather than through early admissions.

OPINION

A new watchdog?

A new breed of censorship has recently reared its head in the broadcast media. It's been no stranger to the world of print, but advertiser censorship appears to be making a stunning impact upon the relationship between concerned consumers and broadcasting programmers.

Offended viewers, or listeners, have discovered a potent avenue to exert pressure on programmers — the advertisers who sponsor the shows.

When the Rev. Donald E. Wildmon discovered that Madonna was offered $10 million to do a commercial for Pepsi Cola he asked his supporters to boycott Pepsi's products unless they pulled the ad. Pepsi acquiesced.

There are valid arguments for both sides. However, this is a riddle without an answer.

On one hand, The Universe feels that promotion of good is the highest ideal. However, by the nature of public opinion tyranny of the minority is a very real danger

UNIVERSE OPINION

— especially in an apathetic society. The Reverend's motives appear pure enough. But, for freedom of the press, Wildmon might have popped open a nasty can of worms. Pepsi is jealous of even 10 percent of its advertising market, not a majority by any definition.

This type of coalition blackmail now has advertisers shying away before the show-downs materialize. One example is today's Barbara Walters radio special on abortion.

As of last week, no sponsor had offered its name to run with the show — it's too hot to handle. ABC Radio is financially strong enough to run it without advertisers' support, and they say they will. But local stations do not have that choice.

Broadcasters are scared. They see no boundaries. But it may be that the same independent system used to keep check on government has been bitten by its own watchdog.

All's fair. But a greater fear is that the master is comatose. So-called economic terrorists like Wildmon have to be kept in check as well. This new breed of watchdog has as much power as he is given.

If we are to have a say in what we see and hear we cannot blindly surrender our voices to others simply because they have the energy to act. A fragile balance must be struck. The wide gray line between acceptable and not acceptable is redrawn daily. But now the penman's identity has taken on its own shade of gray.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Inconsistency

Dear Editor:

One year ago, after applying for a Pell Grant for the 1988-1989 school year, I learned that my wife was pregnant with our first child.

Upon receiving the results stating that I had been given a partial award, I made a visit to the-BYU Financial Aid Office. I hoped that by revising my grant application my award would be increased.

The counselor I saw informed me that my original application could not be updated and that I could not petition for an increased amount.

Months later I met a fellow student who, under the same circumstances, was able to correct his application and receive a larger grant. Doubtfully, I returned to the Financial Aid Office and met with yet another counselor.

This beloved woman listened to my case, told me that I had been misled, and then she outlined the steps I needed to take to receive the appropriate award.

Within a few months I was granted a full award which brought an end to my distress and allowed me to attend winter semester.

I tell this story not as a heartwarming account of one student's financial woes, but as an example of the uncertainty among some financial aid personnel regarding critical policies.

The most convincing evidence of this charge is found by phoning two financial aid employees on separate occasions and asking each the very same question regarding financial aid. At times I have found the replies to be totally inconsistent.

I do not fault the entire BYU Financial Aid Office. But all it takes is one employee giving incorrect information to an unknowing student to cause, among other things, mental anguish.

Bad feelings

Dear Editor:

In response to "Speaker Says

Women Should Hold Priesthood," I am sympathetic to the fact that the whole story can never be told in newspaper reports.

Part of what each speaker said was valid and acceptable to my own thinking.

But no forum is just a group of speakers: There was a most interesting audience of over 300 people emitting a fierce explosiveness that was apparent the moment I sat down.

Under different circumstances many of those attracted to the meeting could have evolved into a mob!

There were a few faculty families and others from Provo who came out of curiosity or with real emotional support to the issues. Then there were those, about one-fourth of them men, who were very vocal from their seats from the start.

They possessed an anxious readiness to wildly applaud whenever our General Authorities were obliquely incriminated as being old guard, unaware of social issues and entrenched in ancient positions of carefully guarded male superiority.

By no means could I feel any of the Spirit of the Lord there. It was an anti-Mormon spirit, in spite of their calling themselves the "Mormon Women's Forum."

Good support

Dear Editor:

We would like to extend a warm thanks to all of the many volunteers, host families and individuals, and athletes who made the 1989 Special Olympics Summer Games such a success!

Countless hours were spent in planning and making the event such a positive one for the athletes and everyone involved.

Thank you for your support and we hope to see you at next year's Summer Games.

Lefty woes

Dear Editor:

I was sitting in one of my classes trying to take careful notes. Being left-handed this became a very difficult task.

I then tried to find the proper position for my arm and could not take notes during this time.

When I finally found the correct position, my notes were unreadable. Living in a right-handed world I am not one to complain about too many things, but the desks at BYU are absolutely ridiculous.

For one thing they're about the size of a wallet, and every desk is made for a right-handed person.

The left-hander has always been discriminated against. They were once thought to be evil persons and even killed because of their hand preference.

I'm sure most of you right-handers are thinking: "Does it really matter whether there are left or right-handed desks?" It does.

Trying to stabilize your handwriting is very challenging. It is a nuisance if the desks are not right-handed desks?" It does.

The Testing Center has the same idea. They have two rows of right-handed desks for comfortable taking. If other classrooms were to follow the Testing Center's idea, right-handed students would be grateful.

VIEWPOINT

necessary applications and information to fill out and I was told to contact them in a week. The committee would review the forms and reach a decision by then.

One week later, I visited with the lady overseeing the applications. She apologized for any inconvenience in my filling out the forms and regretted to inform me that my husband was not eligible for financial aid because he was from Africa.

You see, only Lamanites are given any kind of assistance from the Multicultural Center. However, they said they were working on branching out to help students of other nationalities requiring aid. I was told to check with her next month and she would meet with the committee and discuss these possibilities.

Each time in the following four months I checked with their office I was told, "I'm sorry, nothing has been decided yet, but we are working on it. Give us a call next month and hopefully we'll have better news."

I finally realized the decision had already been made. We would never receive assistance. Neither would any other foreign student who didn't have Lamanite blood.

I made one last trip to their office and met with their accountant. He told me their funds were only for Lamanite descendants and would probably never include other nationalities.

When I inquired why they then referred to themselves as the "Multicultural Center," he stated, "We only have Lamanites come from several countries other than the United States."

It had been a while since I checked with their staff so I checked with them again. When I phoned them a week, I was given the same answer: "Basically yes, all our funds are for Lamanite students."

Ironically and without fail, the band receives a phone call from each time the Multicultural Center wants help during international or other multicultural events.

A lot of our time was wasted checking back with their office several months in a row. They said all along that we would never receive financial aid.

As members of the LDS Church, I find it contrary to its teachings that only a select group could receive assistance. It's sad we cannot have equal assistance to students regardless of nationality or race.

Bicycle thefts increase at BYU with the change in weather

BY TYLER L. NEBEKER
Universe Staff Writer

As the warmer weather brings out the bicycles from their winter storage, it also brings out the bicycle thieves.

Since April 1 there have been 15 bicycles reported to BYU University Police as missing or stolen, said Paul Bringham, crime prevention specialist for BYU University Police.

In the past, only unlocked bicycles were taken, but now less secured bicycles are being taken because the risk of being caught is outweighed by the expense of expensive bikes, especially mountain bikes, appearing more frequently on campus, said Bringham. "It just does not make good sense to spend hundreds of dollars on a new bike and only spend a few dollars for a lock," said Bringham. "The person should buy a high quality lock that will lock both tires and the frame to the rack."

Most of the thefts have occurred at the on-campus housing complexes, said Bringham. Bikes need to be secured in bike racks where the area is lit and there is a lot of pedestrian traffic, he said.

Bikes are secured in places other than bike racks there is the possibility the bike will be impounded and taken to the Traffic Office, said Bringham. Mike Harroun, manager of Traffic Services, said a bike will be impounded if it is unregistered and not in the rack.

A bike license from any Utah city will be honored at BYU, Harroun. Bikes can also be registered with Provo City Licensing Department or the BYU Traffic Office, he said.

A bike will also be impounded if the bike is locked to a railing or tree that interferes with the handicapped or maintenance crew or causes damage, such as scraping paint off of a building, said Harroun.

After a bike is impounded it is held a minimum of 90 days. If the bike is not claimed, attempts are made to contact the bike owner," said Harroun. If the bike is not claimed, it is sold as unclaimed, impounded property at the university surplus sale," he said.

The University Police sell about 50 to 60 unclaimed bikes every year, said Harroun.

"Another problem we have is bikers riding on the campus sidewalks. We get quite a few complaints from pedestrians about bikers racing through campus," said Bringham.

"Bikers on campus should be courteous and cautious, and should not ride during breaks between classes when foot traffic is heavier than normal."

Bikers also need to follow all traffic laws, signs and signals such as stopping at stop lights and signs, said Bringham. Bikers need to stay to the right side of road and ride with the flow of traffic, he said.

Nursing dean visits mansion

Governor Bangerter hosts breakfasts

By REBECCA HERRON
Universe Staff Writer

The dean of BYU's College of Nursing has been invited by Gov. Norman H. Bangerter to participate in the "Governor's Health Policy Breakfasts."

June Leifson will join 25 other community leaders and health-care experts in an effort to build broader understanding of health-care issues and to enhance cooperation and innovation among health-care providers.

Among those in the core group of the program will be former Gov. Scott Matheson, and Francis Farley of the State Senate.

The first of the breakfasts will be held Thursday at the Governor's Mansion. The breakfasts will be held bimonthly for at least one year, said Leifson.

Leifson was awarded the Brigham Award in 1988 from BYUSA for exemplary service and commitment.

She has also served on the BYUSA restructuring committee. Leifson was one of three women to receive the "Today's Women's Award" from the Women's Division of the Chamber of Commerce for Provo and Orem cities in 1988.

In 1982, Leifson received the Beatty Award from the Utah Public Health Association. It is the highest award for achievement in public health.

Leifson was president of the Utah Nurses Association from 1985-87. She is a member of the American Public Health Association, the National League of Nursing, and the National Council on Family Relations.

As a member of the National League of Nursing, Leifson serves as a site visitor for national accreditation. She visits college campuses and gathers information for accrediting or reaccrediting their nursing schools.

Leifson is a member of the Utah Health Advisory Council, a seven-member committee that advises the State Health Department.

Leifson joined the faculty at BYU in 1971 and was appointed dean of the College of Nursing in 1985. She received her bachelor's degree from BYU in 1957. In 1964, she was awarded her master's degree from Wayne State University. She received her doctorate in family studies from BYU in 1979.

BYU professor gets Fulbright research grant

By KRISTIN R. HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU professor has been awarded a Fulbright grant to do research at the Hebrew University in Israel.

David P. Wright, assistant professor of Hebrew and Near Eastern languages, is one of 1,000 United States grantees being sent abroad under the Fulbright program for the 1989-90 academic year.

His research will involve "studying ritual in the prophetic books of Jeremiah and Ezekiel," said Wright.

Wright and his family will leave for Israel in August where they will live for one year, he said.

The Wrights will live in an apartment in Jerusalem and the children will attend a public Hebrew school, he said.

Wright received his bachelor's degree from the University of Utah and his master's and doctoral degrees from the University of California at Berkeley.

He has written numerous technical articles that have been published in the United States and abroad.

Wright was one of the recipients of the National Resource Fellowship in Arabic and Hebrew during 1980-83. He was honored by the University of Utah in 1976 and 1977 with The Stanley Adelman Memorial Award and The Ethel Zucker Prize for Hebrew.

In 1987 Wright was listed in Outstanding Young Men in America.

The Fulbright program was established in 1946 under congressional legislation.

The program awards grants to individuals on the basis of their ability and willingness to share experiences and ideas with people of diverse cultures and their academic and professional qualifications.

Entertainment and cleanup added to BYU's Service to Go groups needed to help with neighborhood projects

By JURA BROWN
Universe Staff Writer

Service To Go, a BYUSA program, has added two new groups to the program this spring — neighborhood cleanup and nursing home entertainment — said BYUSA assistant president Cristi Butler.

Service To Go program originally set up in the fall of 1987, said Butler.

There are groups that do a service project but now where or how to find a project, Butler said.

The program was set up so groups could call in and ask for service projects," said Butler.

Groups that call in for service projects are wards, service college organizations, of apartments or friends and Family Home groups, said Butler.

Neighborhood cleanup projects are usually for elderly people who are unable to care for their homes," said Butler.

The majority of the jobs are things like washing windows, painting, weeding and cleaning.

"There is a huge variety of projects," said Butler.

The elderly people in the community are aware of Service To Go and call for help. The program is set up so big organizations that work with people could call with a job they need done. Butler said the United Way calls when they need help with a project.

The projects are not ongoing projects for a group, said Butler. Once a project is completed, the group is done. Even if the project is ongoing, the same group doesn't go back. It's a new group each time.

Butler said that in the fall, letters were sent to bishops of BYU wards to notify them of the service. Wards call in a lot for projects, said Butler.

Butler said approximately 120 groups have completed projects since the program began.

During Spring Term, the administration of the program is being reorganized so that the program will run more smoothly, said Butler.

Successful studio develops youths' talents

By MARK A. MILLS
Universe Staff Writer

Many BYU students are using their musical talents to enrich lives. A former BYU Young Ambassador formulated On Stage Studios, an entertainment organization, and is having astounding success.

Jann McCardell, director of On Stage Studios in Salt Lake City, performed two and a half years with the Young Ambassadors and is now putting that experience to work.

On Stage Studios is an organization helping youth build the talents they have and prepare them for possible future careers in the entertainment field, said Roxanne Smith, instructor and choreographer for the organization.

There are eight groups in the organization with ages ranging from 6 to 21, (the youngest member is Merrill Osmond's daughter) and all of the groups perform, McCardell said.

Annual auditions must be passed in order to become members, to maintain membership in a particular group and to advance to other groups, said Allison Bennion, instructor and choreographer. "We look for the charismatic entertainment appeal in the auditions; a lot of the kids have it," Smith said.

Approximately 300 members make up the eight groups which come together once a week for a three-hour practice session. "Members have to be well versed in the entertainment skills of dancing and singing. I want to maintain the high quality," McCardell said.

Rhythm, one of the more advanced groups, performed Tuesday in the ELWC Garden Court and will perform again at BYU June 30th.

Rhythm member, Kameal Keetch, of Midvale, said she loves to perform in the entertainment group.

Nathan Kershaw, group member from Sandy, said he hopes to make it to the entertainment world and sees the experience of performing with Rhythm as invaluable.

BYUSA invited the group to BYU to provide entertainment for the youth conferences that are on campus.

McCardell said she is working on a music fashion show with Alan and Merrill Osmond.

The group members will be modeling the new fall fashions while at the same time they will be performing their song and dance routines, McCardell said. The fashion show will be performed at the South Town Mall for two weeks with two shows a day, McCardell said.

The group Rhythm, performs at Seven Peaks Water Resort. The group is a part of On Stage Studios, an entertainment organization formed by former BYU students. On Stage Studios helps youths build their talents and prepare for possible careers in the entertainment field.

Band formed by students performs 'behind bars'

By AMY K. STEWART
Universe Staff Writer

Audrey Smiley, a rock group formed by BYU students, did time "behind bars" in the Utah State Penitentiary Saturday.

The prison's relief society president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Wanda Lindstrom, volunteers at the prison and asked Audrey Smiley to perform for the prison's relief society group as a special activity. The performance will be one of many in Audrey Smiley's "Behind Bars" tour, which began Friday at the Jailhouse Cafe in Provo.

Audrey Smiley was formed in the spring of 1988 when Dale Garrard, a senior from Burley, Idaho, majoring in psychology, and Craig E. Moore, a junior from Charleston, W. Va., majoring in advertising, met George Carlston, bass guitar player from Burbank, Calif. They were later joined by Dan Day, a drum player who goes to Provo's Timpview High School.

Audrey Smiley is actually the name of a 17-year-old girl who lives in Liverpool. Carlston met Smiley when he was serving an LDS mission in England.

Smiley's parents often had the missionaries over for dinner and she frequently mentioned to Carlston and his companion that she wanted to come to the United States.

"I thought if she wants to come to the states so bad, I'll just bring her name here," Carlston said.

The group did covers at first, but are now coming out with their own songs. "We're trying to stay away

Audrey Smiley, a rock band named after a girl in Liverpool, England, performed for the Utah State Penitentiary Relief Society. The band is working on its first album.

from playing popular songs which some people in the bars want to hear," Day said. "Our main goal is to play our own originals."

Audrey Smiley is still working on getting their first album produced, but they have done one music video to their song "Fence Away."

The video was filmed at Provo Canyon School. "The video has a story to it," said Garrard. "It's about troubled teens and how they feel when they are put into teen homes away from their families."

The group's music style differs depending on the song. "We don't sound like anyone else, especially R.E.M.," Moore said. Sometimes their original songs have country overtones; others sound like old Beatles or Elvis songs. "Our singing can be really versatile," Moore said.

For performances, the group sometimes wears suits and ties for the "missionary look" and sometimes black shirts with torn jeans. For something different, they will wear thrift shop outfits on stage. "That's not a fashion statement; that's all we can afford," Moore said.

The members of Audrey Smiley are definitely not in the music business for the money, Garrard said. "If we never made a cent, we would still keep playing."

"If you're in it for the money, you're in the wrong business," Moore said. "Also, covers are a cop out. That's why we are doing our own songs now."

"I am fulfilling a great dream by being in the band," Garrard said. "If I had the chance to be in any other band in the world, I wouldn't take it."

Part of the success of any group is the ability of the members to get along well with each other, Day said. "Sometimes we're ready to kill each other, but we get over it," he said.

Audrey Smiley has no set leader. "It is a partnership, not a democracy," Moore said. "We never vote. We just work at it until it gets done."

One band member will say half a sentence and another will finish it for him, Moore said. "It didn't take us long at the beginning to start relating like that."

All of the group's members discovered their musical abilities at an early age. "At age five, when everyone else was playing cowboys and Indians at recess, I was playing Beatles," Moore said.

Garrard started doing vocal solos in church at age three. Garrard said he remembers singing along to old Beatles records when he was young enough to be in a high chair.

'The Hit' rises to success with first single; expects album to be released in two months

By AMY K. STEWART
Universe Staff Writer

The Hit, a rock group formed by four BYU students, is rising to success with its first single "Dozen Roses," and are expecting their first album to be out in two months.

The Hit was formed less than a year ago when BYU students Pete Weiland, from San Antonio, Texas, majoring in advertising and Scott Mangione, also from San Antonio, majoring in biology, met up with Mark Orndorff, from Seattle, Wash., majoring in music and Matthew Morris, from California majoring in communications. Just six days after the group was together, the members performed at a University of Utah fraternity luau. "It went surprisingly well for a first time," Orndorff said.

Both Orndorff and Morris learned more than 30 songs during only five rehearsals to prepare for their first gig.

In the short time the band has been together, they have become popular in Salt Lake City area clubs. The group's music style is mostly hard rock and modern music.

In Provo, the group performs mostly at Caddy's, doing '50s and '60s hit songs. The Hit also performs at fraternity parties, mostly during the fall.

"We can play different styles at any club," Weiland said. "That's what makes us so successful."

Getting the band going was not easy. "It took a lot of hard work and perseverance," Mangione said. "We had to make phone calls, knock on doors and pester club owners."

It took the group about four months to get recognized in the club scene. "Now they call us," Mangione said.

The Hit has been successful in playing popular songs by other groups, but wants to start doing more of their own original songs as soon as possible. "Dozen Roses," their first single so far, was written by Orndorff. It is a rhythmic, upbeat tune which features

Orndorff on vocals. The group's first album, the name of which has not been released, will have six original songs including "Dozen Roses."

"Private Eye" music magazine named The Hit one of the best bands in the Salt Lake City area. "If I didn't think this band was going somewhere, I wouldn't be in it," Mangione said. "There's a magic between the four of us."

"We get audience participation to the max," Orndorff said. The Hit actually had to stop a performance once because fans in the club got too wild and began coming up on stage and tearing things apart.

"All our songs have a lot of energy," Mangione said. "People get crazy, almost too much."

As the new band in town, The Hit has its share of problems. The group has to keep its $30,000 sound equipment in top shape along with other expenses such as phone bills and mailing of the group's monthly newsletter to fans.

Even though the group has typical band problems, they don't let it get in the way of their success, Mangione said.

"Things can be stressful and it is difficult getting everyone together to practice, but we don't have any problems between band members," he said. "We may have some words for about 30 seconds, but then it's over with."

for White, the initial fantasy evolved into an appreciation of port of fencing. White, who has fencing in competition for about years, enjoys the individual etitive aspect of the sport.

ile BYU does not have a school turned to BYU as a graduate assistant coach to earn a master's degree in physical education coaching.

Bosco, who also guided the Cougars to a 10-3 mark in 1985, has had a relatively disappointing career since graduating from BYU in 1986.

"I was hit just as I was throwing the ball in the fourth game of my senior year, and it tore most of the tendons and ligaments in my shoulder.
From then on, every time I threw the ball it just separated more and caused more damage," Bosco said.

That injury was definitely the beginning of the disappointment with such a promising professional career ahead.

Despite the injury to his shoulder, he was drafted in the third round of the 1986 draft by the Green Bay Packers. Bosco worked hard on the shoulder in therapy, but it was no go from the start.

Between my first and second year, the Packers sent me to Los Angeles to have my shoulder operated on by Dr.

Jobe, a renowned orthopedic surgeon.

"He fixed it well, but when you get such a significant injury to a major part of your game, it makes it nearly impossible to come back and play well," said Bosco.

"For me to tear my shoulder was like a running back blowing his knee out. The physical skills just aren't the same after an injury like that," he said.

He was released from the Packers at the start of the 1988 season. "I knew I didn't want to try and rehabilitate my shoulder. The direction I really wanted to be going was to coach on the college level," he said.

Since he was released so late in the beginning of the season, the prospects were fairly limited. I knew the coach for Idaho State, so I called him and asked him if there was anything I could do, Bosco said.

He got the job as quarterback coach, but it really couldn't be classified as a job. "In Division I-AA football there can only be so many paid coaches and assistants, and I wasn't one of them and most likely wasn't going to be one this coming year," he said.

I only did it for the experience, not because I needed a job, he said. He called plays for much of the season, and said that was beneficial as a coach.

After a disappointing 0-11 season record in the Big Sky Conference, Bosco decided he needed to move on to something else.

"I needed to go somewhere that was more upward mobile toward my goals for the future," he said. He talked to BYU coach Lavell Edwards about coming back to BYU as a graduate assistant and got the position.

His role in the Cougar organization will be to teach the quarterbacks the skills he has acquired through his years on the gridiron.

"I run them through drills and help them with their reads. We have some great quarterbacks to work with this year," he said.

Still, none of the coaches is saying who the starting quarterback will be.
That decision will be left up to Lavell, said Bosco and Lavell has said he won't comment on who will get the starting position until the beginning of this coming season.

"Everybody is coming into practice
this August with a clean slate," said Bosco. Ty (Detmer) had a good spring practice and Sean (Covey) has been working hard all summer in therapy for his knee. They're both great quarterbacks in their particular styles, Bosco said.

"I'm excited about being here at BYU and the opportunities it will provide me to learn more about coaching," said Bosco. "BYU has one of the greatest coaching staffs I've been associated with and it will be a pleasure to work with them."

"I was working full-time and didn't have the time to attend class."

"I chose Independent Study because it added flexibility to my schedule and it was easier having the option of studying on my own time."

If you don't have the time to take all the courses you need on-campus, Independent Study can solve that problem.

Independent Study offers 300 college-level courses and represents over 50 BYU departments. It is an excellent supplement to your on-campus schedule.

- You receive the same credit as campus courses.
- All courses are taught by BYU professors.
- Gives more flexibility to your schedule.
- You may enroll at any time.
- You can take up to a full year to complete courses.
- You can work at your own pace.

Pick up a free Independent Study catalog at your College Advisement Center, the information desks at the Wilkinson
Center or ASB, or at the Harman
Continuing Education Building. Or call us at 378-4044. We'll be happy to answer your questions.

"I thought the course was well written and easy to understand. I highly recommend Independent Study to anyone who is working and has to finish their education."

Desperate dad demands walkman

More than 50 million sold in 10 years;
cassette-players found around the world

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The technology behind the Walkman portable cassette-player might never have developed without these words from Sony Chairman Akio Morita: "TURN DOWN THAT MUSIC!"

Morita, seeking to soften his children's blasting stereos, asked his development team for something that would let the kids rock out without deafening dad. Working from a model developed by Sony founder Masaru Ibuka, model TPS-L2 rolled off the assembly line a year later — the first Sony Walkman, unveiled July 1, 1979.

In the decade since, the Walkman and its imitators have become ubiquitous, with tiny headphones appearing on millions of heads worldwide — traffic-bound commuters, long-distance runners and house-cleaning parents as well as their rock 'n' rolling kids.

"The Sony Walkman has in fact changed the way the world listens to music," said Tom Harvey, president of the Sony Consumer Audio Product Company. "It's changed our lifestyles."

Go argue. As the Walkman marks its 10th birthday, it has become a cultural phenomenon, as American as Toyotas or sushi.

The Walkman wasn't an immediate sensation. Initially it was called Soundabout in the United States, Stowaway in the United Kingdom, Freestyle in Sweden and Walkman in Japan and other world markets.

But Morita argued for uniformity, and sales in the United States, 37,000 units in 1979, took off after the Walkman name was adopted in May 1980. From then on, the personal stereo cassette deck was up and running.

"Retailers told us, 'You guys are absolutely out of your minds. It doesn't even record, and it costs $200. It's never going to go anywhere,'" Harvey said. "The next thing I know, we've got back orders for 1 1/2 years."

Dozens of competitors from Panasonic to General Electric recognized a good thing and began manufacturing their own brands. By 1982, Time magazine was hailing the Walkman as the gadget of the year. By 1984, Sony had cranked out 10 million which climbed to 30 million by 1987. Today, there are more than 50 million — about half of them worn in the U.S.A.

While the first model had a retail price of $199.95, today's Walkman prices run as low as $14.95 for an FM,

Highlights of the Walkman's first decade include:

- Walkman: A Space Odyssey. A specially adapted Walkman was sent into orbit attached to astronaut-senator Jake Garn, recording the sounds of his bowels for posterity. This was a scientific experiment (really).

- Illegal Walkman. Teachers at the University of Illinois were warned of students using Walkmans (Walkmen?) to play "oral crib sheets" during tests.

- Walkman: The Movie. Michael J. Fox, blasting an Eddie van Halen guitar solo through a Walkman, convinced his '50s-bound father there was life on other planets in "Back to the Future."

- The Royal Walkman. Princess Diana owns a gold-plated number that she plays while relaxing in Kensington Palace.

radio-only model. There are 44 Sony models: water-resistant, with AM-FM radios, with recording capability, built for the outdoorsman. Television freaks now have the Watchman, a tiny portable TV set; die-hard audiophiles have the Discman, a portable CD player.

53,544 AIDS deaths reported since 1983

By MATTHEW VAIL
Universe Staff Writer

Since 1983, when Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome was first reported in the United States, there has been 94,280 reported cases of AIDS with 53,544 deaths, according to the National Center for Disease Control.

"More than 5,000 new cases were reported just in the last month," said a spokesman for the disease control center. "AIDS will continue to spread at a faster rate in the larger cities because of homosexual communities and people who share intravenous drugs." In Utah, since 1983, there has been 203 reported cases of AIDS, with 124 of those cases resulting in death, said Norma Allen, a spokeswoman for the Utah Department of Health. Allen said nine more cases were reported last month.

According to Utah Department of Health summary report statistics, the most recent AIDS age group breakdown in Utah shows five reported cases for children under 12, three reported cases for the 13 to 19 age group and 44 reported cases for the 20 to 29 age group. The 30 to 39 age group has the highest number of reported cases, with 106. The 40 to 49 age group has 32 reported cases, and the 49 and older age group has 13 reported cases.

Male baby falcon breaks wing

SALT LAKE CITY — One of the peregrine falcons nesting at the Hotel Utah fell from a ninth-floor window ledge, breaking his left wing as he struck the railing on a fifth-floor balcony.

He has a mid-shaft fracture of the humerus," said Bob Walters, a game biologist for the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources who has been monitoring the downtown falcons.

Walters said a metal pin will be inserted in the broken wing. If the operation is successful, the bird likely can be rehabilitated and released again to the wild, possibly back into the downtown area.

If the operation doesn't work, the bird will be used for breeding or educational purposes.

Meanwhile, his sister took her first flight Monday. Both were awkward affairs. The first ended in the middle of traffic, where she was rescued by volunteers. The second ended in a crash. She was not injured in either flight and both times she was carried back to the hotel's roof in the elevator.

This is the fourth year that young have been produced by the pair of endangered peregrine falcons that took up residence on the ledges of the former hotel now used for church offices. It's the first time any of those babies have been injured.

Volunteers surround the hotel, standing by for the babies' first flights.

Bruce Clements, a volunteer falcon watcher, said the young male took his first flight Sunday about 10:30 a.m. The falcon jumped from his nest on the south side of the Hotel Utah, glided across the street, and tried to land on the side of the Kennecott Building.

Finding no perches on that building, he tumbled down the side of the building, crashing onto an awning over the sidewalk. He was ruffled but unharmed. The bird then walked around the edge of the awning before launching himself into the path of an east-bound truck on South Temple.

Clements said an accident was narrowly averted when Walters jumped into the road and made an over-the-shoulder catch of the flying bird just before it struck the truck.

The male was returned to the roof of the Hotel Utah where he made two short but successful flights late Sunday.

The accident occurred Monday about 12:30 p.m. while the male was perched on a ninth-story window ledge on the south side of the hotel. He was flapping his wings when a strong gust of wind appeared to toss him off balance. The falcon slipped off the sill and dropped four stories to a small balcony where he apparently struck the metal railing with his left wing.

BYU student's art in summer show

By MARK A. MILLS
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU student, who was a 1988 award winner in the Utah Arts Festival, will have his art work displayed again in the 1989 Utah Arts Festival.

Kelly Hebert, who is spending his summer in Alaska, is a student in the masters of fine art program at BYU. His pottery will be on display in the visual art section of the festival.

The festival, in its 13th season, will be held at the Triad Center in Salt Lake City today through Sunday. A variety of fine art will be represented in the five-day celebration.

Jamie Leigh-Galli, administrative coordinator for the festival said the art will range from visual, folk, performing and literary. This year the unique attraction will be "Thrills," an interactive performance and visual art exhibition.

The public will benefit greatly by attending this year's festival because of its diversified range of art work, he said.

The Utah Arts Festival began in June of 1977. It was named The Salt Lake Festival of The Arts, but the name changed and so has the size of the festival and the funding. In the beginning the festival was funded by only $38,000, and today it is close to $500,000.

The slogan "FINE ART, SERIOUS FUN" depicts the type of disposition the festival is trying to portray.

Performing arts are scheduled every day from noon to midnight. Local performers include the Utah Symphony, RDT-Repertory Dance Theater, Children's Dance Theater and Ririe-Woodbury Dance Company.

Hebert's work will be displayed in booth 44 of the Visual Arts section. Also, the section will feature an "Artist of the Day" booth. Many of the artist attending will be from Utah's own ranks.

The Demonstrating Arts will host the members of the Marion Carter Storytelling Festival. The Mysterious Forest will be the highlight of the Children's Art Yard where children can actually have the experience of adding their own touch to the festival by changing the sounds of the forest.

The works of Utah's finest writers will be presented in the Literary Art Booth where many authors will be present to sign autographs.

An eye catching sculpture of the festival will be "A Crazy Line," by Neil Hadlock. The exhibit is a 6-inch, square tubing made of 20 to 30-foot sections that will extend 250 feet throughout the park. This quality work will be an example of environmental art on display.

"Exhibition 1989: Contemporary Utah Painting," will feature the works of many of Utah's artists.

Festival attendance in the past has ranged from 81,000 to 88,000 people. "We hope to have more than 90,000 attend this year," said Robin Nelson, assistant director of the festival.

Hours for the festival are noon to midnight Wednesday through Saturday, and noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is reasonable and ticket prices vary for children, adults and senior citizens.

UTA seeks more money for light rail

SALT LAKE CITY — The Utah Transit Authority, in addition to buying property for a light-rail system in the Salt Lake Valley, is seeking more tax revenue to finance the project.

UTA says it will seek another quarter-cent sales tax increase from Salt Lake County residents, on top of the quarter-cent sales tax they already are paying to help generate the funds needed to pay for the $260 million project between Sandy and Salt Lake City.

In anticipation of the project, UTA purchased three parcels of land about one year ago in the Sandy and Murray areas.

The property represents less than 2 percent of the total land needed. The purchased parcels range from 1 to 10 acres, said Michael Allegra, UTA's manager of planning.

Allegra said the property was purchased because of its key location along the path of the proposed light-rail system.

If the property had been bought by others and been developed, UTA would have been forced to pay tremendous prices in the future for the same parcels, he said.

Allegra said that even if the light-rail system is not implemented, UTA could always use the property for "park and ride" lots.

Allegra said UTA plans to ask the state legislature to remove its present sales tax ceiling and ask that the tax cap be increased.

If the request is approved, UTA will most likely go to the Salt Lake County commissioners, who would set the tax rate before it went to the public for a vote, he said.

The light-rail system is meant to ease traffic congestion in the Salt Lake Valley before the end of the century.
